Here you can read an excerpt from what the FIFA (Fédération Internationale de Football Association) president Joseph S. Blatter wrote in his greetings:

Die Welt zu Gast bei Freunden

That is the striking slogan of a great event which lies straight ahead – the 2006 FIFA World Cup in Germany. Seventeen years after the fall of the Berlin Wall, a reunified Germany will throw open its doors to the world.

By holding the tournament Germany will have the opportunity to rectify certain clichés and preconceived ideas. The world will have the chance to see what a fantastic country Germany truly is: the beauty and diversity of its landscapes, its rich cultural heritage and good humour of its people.

The president is pleased to say qualities like the legendary German work ethic and organizational skills are alive and well and FIFA is only too happy to take advantage of them. For all its levels the overall investment in any World Cup tournament is immense. But today's efforts will bear fruit tomorrow. German football will boast twelve spanking new or vastly improved stadiums in 2006.

The whole German population will also derive benefit from better transport and reception infrastructures. Football clubs, schools and people all over the country have really got behind this great event.

Like other countries such as Mexico, Italy or France Germany is now organizing its second FIFA World Cup. The first saw the great Franz Beckenbauer lift the trophy as captain of the winning team in 1974.

Then only 16 teams took part, but this time 32 will have qualified, including African and Asian teams and all of them perform at a high level. So the tournament will be a vastly different affair.

And these performances show the efforts FIFA made in the last quarter of century to help the nations of the football world to compete on an equal footing.

The world is looking forward to celebrate this unity.

Looking back ...

By the way, did you know that football is an old game invented by the Chinese more than 2000 years ago? They called it TSU CHU which literally means "kick the ball" and bamboo poles were used as goals.

Also the ancient Greeks played a similar ball game.

The starting point of modern football came with the expansion of public schools in England in the middle of the 19th century. At Eton, Harrow or Winchester organized games became part of the curriculum with their emphasis on order, discipline and team spirit. So it all began there but then quickly spread to Europe and other continents. However, at first only boys or men could take part in official events, till in 1991 the first FIFA World Cup for women was held in China. And so football has become the most popular sport for both genders worldwide played by nearly 250 million people including 40 million women. The number of TV viewers, stadium spectators and fans amounts to billions.

Maybe a new record will be set up during the 2006 world championship.

Teil II5 BE

What makes football attractive to female players?
Write down the relevant information in complete German sentences.
Use worksheet 2.

"More of us are into it because it's sexy."

Who says girls cannot play traditional male sports? After women proved themselves capable of running marathons, sailing around the world single-handedly and swimming the Channel, in the late 20th century, their approach to football was just a question of time.

Girls' football is the fastest-growing sport in Britain, and now some of the most famous schools in the country are practising dribbling, passing and shooting, sometimes under professional instruction.

A competition organizer and coach, said that one reason football was attractive to girls was that there was such fluidity in the game, whereas netball players must occupy set positions.

Lynn Wright, a PE teacher, pointed out, "I think girls like football today because it's more physical than some of the other sports they do. It may be because the girls today are a bit more rufy-tufy*, if you get my meaning." Her students added the "team spirit" as well.

"I like it because I play it", said Sophie, a player from Huntingdon. She thought that more and more girls were getting into it because it was sexy and the boys quite liked it when the girls could do what the boys had been doing for so long.
